

COMPANIES THAT DON'T TEST ON ANIMALS

Attribution: The following data is sourced from <https://crueltyfree.peta.org/> and I wish to acknowledge and honor their contribution. The purpose of using this data on our website is to provide maximum accessibility to consumers, enabling them to make ethical and sustainable purchasing decisions. We recognize the valuable efforts of organizations like PETA, which continuously update and offer databases to conscientious consumers.

What Types of Companies Are on the "Don't Test" List?

The "Don't Test" list comprises companies engaged in the production of cosmetics, personal-care products, household-cleaning items, and other commonly used household products.

All the companies featured on PETA's "don't test" list have provided a signed PETA statement of assurance, confirming that they, as well as their ingredient suppliers, do not conduct, commission, finance, or condone any form of animal testing for ingredients, formulations, or finished products worldwide, both presently and in the future.

Cruelty Free Panda strongly encourage consumers to support the companies listed here, as they have demonstrated a firm commitment to producing products without causing harm to animals.

Can I Trust a Product Label That Says, 'No Animal Testing'?

Be cautious when it comes to product labels, as they can be misleading. There are currently no specific laws governing the use of "cruelty-free" or "no animal testing" labels on products, which means companies might not adhere to the same high standards as PETA when it comes to labeling their products. Peta's criteria encompass not only the finished products but also the ingredients, ingredient suppliers, and formulations.

It's important to note that a company claiming not to test on animals, but not appearing on our list, might have stopped animal testing for finished products only, while continuing it for ingredients.

Cruelty Free Panda advise you to consider purchasing products exclusively from companies listed on below "Don't Test" list to support ethical practices and animal-friendly choices. Remember, it's crucial to stay vigilant and make informed decisions while navigating the claims made on product labels.
